

Department of Security Sciences and Private Security

The Faculty of Security is a higher education scientific and research institution implementing educational, scientific, research and applicative activities in the areas of security sciences, criminalistics, criminology, police sciences and other related sciences.

With the implementation of its study programmes, the Faculty of Security has established itself as an educational, scientific and research institution in the area of security and the fight against criminality and other socially negative phenomena, thus justifying its existence.

The work of the Department of Security Sciences and Private Security is aimed at following, defining and researching security phenomena and processes, and also on the basis of established scientific methods and instruments suggesting and implementing adequate theoretical and practical solutions.

One curiosity is that we have the field of study in private security, being the only institution that encompasses private security as a separate segment of security science. Within these frameworks, members of the department, each in their own field of research, cover a segment of security enforcement in the private sector. This encourages and further develops scientific thought in these areas, as a basic prerequisite for efficient organization and effectiveness in the fight against criminality and socially negative phenomena and tendencies, as well as achievement of optimal level of security and protection of social and personal values of the citizens.

The members of this department are committed to educating highly professional and competent individuals that would work in the institutions and services in the respective area, as well as carrying out scientific, research and educational work in the areas of security sciences, criminology, criminalistics and police sciences.

Due to the multiplicity of forms of occurrence and specific forms of security encroachment, within the scientific approach, and with the aim to establish and maintain security, it is necessary that problems and events are observed in a multidisciplinary manner. To our delight, the Faculty of Security possesses the diversity of staff which such approach requires. The Department is composed of highly respected and distinguished scientific workers, experienced practitioners who are also engaged in helping younger staff members regarding their professional development. Within the Department there are also specific subjects which are covered by professors from other institutions.

The Department of Security Studies and Private Security is composed of the following staff members: professor Tome Batkovski, PhD, professor Boris Murgoski, PhD, associate professor Zlate Dimovski, PhD (head of Department), associate professor Dragana Batic, PhD, associate professor Marjan Nikolovski, PhD, associate professor Sase Gerasimoski, PhD, assistant professor Tatjana Gerginova, PhD, assistant professor Rade Rajkovcevski, PhD, assistant professor Marjan Gjurovski, PhD (secretary of Department), and assistant professor Ice Ilijevski, PhD.